THE PURPLE MASK

The ceremony of awarding the grand prize attracted a great throng to the Academy. So sure were the judges of their procedure, that they foolishly made no effort to examine the painting, and nobody disturbed the draperies that hung before the ex-

With much pomp and digulty, the Judges announced that they had given their award to Exhibit No. 24-and as they made their declaration, the drapes were drawn aside. They had, fortunately for their reputation, made the designation by number instead of the title of the subject-for before their eyes, under the number 24, hung "The Purple Mask."

The crowd applauded the decision, despite their chagrin and astonish- sult in action. ment, could not reverse themselves. Paul Duvelle was beside himself with

The race was sharp and spirited, and Pat's driver brought his machine to a halt just in time for the girl to see Kelly being carried, struggling, into a ramshackle building. The door slammed behind prisoner and captives, and Pat was halted by the impassable barrier.

The girl noticed a door that led to a short flight of stairs, and, with Jacques closely following, she mounted to the floor above the street. She listened intently to the scuffle and sharp voices that reached her ears from the room below. She heard heavy doors slide upon their rollers. Then Jakobski and his gang scrambled to get away.

In a moment Pat heard a voice, that she easily recognized, shouting for help from the room below. Commanding Jacques to aid her, the girl used an axe that was fortunately at hand to chop madly at the thin planking of the floor beneath her feet. The first sharp blows made an aperture through which Pat could look flown upon the room beneath her. The horrified girl beheld a sight that neary made her faint. No. 57. Salads

Chicken Salad.-I really do not believe that a more popular salad exists than chicken salad-in fact, we have it so much at home that we call it our old standby. Whenever any of my studio friends drop in-my bungalow is situated right near the studio-I often fall back on the old standby for a light lunch. It is simple to make and very tasty.

Cut cold a roast or boiled chicken in small diced pieces, and one-half as much blanched celery cut fine, season with salt and pepper. Mix with French dressing and set away for an hour or more. Just before serving stir in some mayonnaise slightly thinned with lemon juice or French dressing, arrange on lettuce leaves and cover it with a thick mayonnaise. Some people use cold veal and tongue mixed in with the chicken but to my mind that does not improve the dish at all. Potato Salad -I speak of potato salad at this moment due mainly to a happy recollection which occurred to me after my return from Grass Valley where a number of scenes many thousand feet below the ground were filmed for my next production, entitled "The Right Direction." We had been down in the tunnel all morning and direc- I ing dish of potato salad.

tor Hopper wanted to finish the scene before going up to the surface. You must remember, my friends, that it took us nearly an hour to reach the top of the elevator shaft. The director sent word up for a little lunch. About two hours later it came down. It was a large bowl of potato salad. Can you picture us all sitting around this large bowl of tempting potato salad, many thousands of feet toward the center of the earth, with the Cooper-Hewitt lights causing weird and fantastic shadows to appear upon the walls of the dark subterranean passage? We had no time for looking at the shadows as our appetites were too keen for anything like that. There is no need of me telling you how we enjoyed our meal, if such it can be called, as I will leave that to your imagination.

Make one-half the amount of boiled cream dressing, that I told you about in a previous installment, allow it to cool, then thin with vinegar or lemon juice, and add two tablespoonfuls of onion juice. Pour over cut-up potatoes while hot. When cold, serve with watercress or field salad, garnishing with diced pickled beets and sliced hard boiled eggs. I shall never forget the "location" where I first ate this tempt-
